US Department of State officers and employees serve to formulate, articulate, and execute US foreign policy. Yet, our diplomatic workforce falls short of representing the diverse composition of the United States as racial and ethnic minorities are continually underrepresented, especially in senior positions. In taking notice of these inequities, the US State Department has renewed its commitment to creating a more diverse and inclusive diplomatic workforce.

As head of human resources and talent management, the director general of the Foreign Service plays a leading role in the hiring, retention, and promotion of our nation's diplomats. In conversation with Dr. Michael Krenn, Former Directors General of the Foreign Service Arnold Chacon, Ruth A. Davis, Edward Gnehm, Mattie R. Sharpless, and Harry K. Thomas will come together to share their experiences addressing issues of diversity and inclusion and discuss how the State Department can take action to create a more inclusive and equitable diplomatic workforce.

At the end of the conversation, Dr. Jane Carpenter-Rock, acting director of the National Museum of American Diplomacy, will share the Museum's newest online exhibit, "Facing Diplomacy."
